Kathleen M. Rasmussen is the Nancy Schlegel Meinig Professor of Maternal and Child Nutrition, Division of Nutritional Sciences, at Cornell University. She received her AB degree from Brown University in molecular biology and both her ScM and ScD degrees from Harvard University in nutrition and her postdoctoral training in nutrition at Cornell University.

Dr. Rasmussen is internationally known for her research on maternal and child nutrition, particularly in the areas of pregnancy and lactation, in both domestic and international settings. The American Public Health Association honored her for her research accomplishments related to maternal-fetal nutrition with their Agnes Higgins Award in 2012. The International Society for Research on Human Milk and Lactation honored her for her research accomplishments related to lactation in 2016. Dr. Rasmussen has been a member of several expert committees at the Institute of Medicine with a focus on women and young children. She served as the chair of the Committee on Reexamination of IOM Pregnancy Weight Guidelines and then as chair of a committee to disseminate these new guidelines. Subsequently, she served as the chair of the Committee to Review WIC Food Packages. She is currently the chair of a committee at the National Academies for Science, Engineering, and Medicine to evaluate the process to develop the Dietary Guidelines for Americans 2020-2025.

Dr. Rasmussen has served as president of the American Society of Nutritional Sciences (2004-05) and also as president of the International Society for Research on Human Milk and Lactation (2002-04). She has been associate dean and secretary of the university faculty (1997-2000) and served on Cornell's Board of Trustees as one of its faculty-elected members (2004-08).

Dr. Rasmussen developed and has served as program director for Cornell's NIH-sponsored training grant in maternal and child nutrition since 1986 and has also directed a training grant in international maternal and child nutrition. Dr. Rasmussen has taught a nationally recognized course in maternal and child nutrition for graduate students since 1980 and has taught a unique course on public health nutrition for undergraduate students since 1998. As part of her commitment to mentoring future leaders in nutrition, Dr. Rasmussen served as the principal faculty member at the Dannon Nutrition Leadership Institute, which she helped to develop, from 1998 until the program ended in 2017. In recognition of these contributions, she received the Excellence in Nutrition Education Award (2006) and also the Mentorship Award (2009) from the American Society for Nutrition. Dr. Rasmussen's service in the nutrition community has been recognized by the Conrad Elvehjem Award for Public Service in Nutrition (2017) from the American Society for Nutrition. In addition, her extensive service as a faculty member and her contributions to institutional quality were recognized by the Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Faculty Service (2020) by the State University of New York.